Coming out of Covid.

Notes:

As part of my drive to find a life without Joseph and to save myself from despair over life with Rahel I was booking myself to watch theatrical performances. I had been reading old diaries and was astonished to discover just how many plays, bands and films I went to see with Maggie during our time together in Birmingham and London.

Covid had put the kibosh on theatre for a couple of years but the Playhouse was trying to rebuild with outdoor performances in Wellington Circus. On Wednesday 4th August not without some trepidation I went to see the Tempest.

The play was produced as a four handed romp with asides to the audience. I thoroughly enjoyed and pleased to find that the actors were more than happy to talk to me afterwards and pose for a photograph. I notice today that the online programme ascribes different roles to those I saw the cast perform. Thinking about it I think the cast mentioned at the beginning that they had changed roles because the previous days performance had not worked so well.

The evening made me feel very me. That self confident me of 2000 when I finally started to find myself at the tender age of 48. Even now I feel I should get out more and engage.

After the performance I headed up Derby Road and I think I went to the Organ Grinder where I was shocked at the prices they charging for Blue Monkey, especially so because it is a Blue Monkey pub. They were also charging a premium for drinking in halves so it was not long at all before I headed for the Billy.
