Matlock Bath sojourn - Day 6.

Notes:

A good walking day. We first climbed to Upperwood and then went down via the very steep footpath opposite West Lodge to South Parade. We tried to walk along the river to the station but the path was closed so we had to climb the cliff side and take a higher footpath.

The station car park was partially occupied by a group of travellers. The footpath near the caravans was covered with dog poo I suspect from their dogs. We could not find a path on that side of the river to the start of High Tor so we had to walk along the road to the next bridge that took visitors to the Heights of Abraham to the cable car station.

High Tor was as terrifying as ever and although in parts much altered from our last visit I had no difficulty at all in recognising the places which caused me so much anxiety when Joseph had approached the edge.

We came down to Old Matlock and walked onto Matlock Green close to where we had stayed years before. I don't think Rahel recognised it. As we walked back into Matlock we went through the park where Joseph played most days for a while on our way into town.

After another visit to the Pointing Dogs we looked to find a bus back to Matlock Bath. A young girl at the bus stop gave us much information on the expected time of arrival, fares and payment. I was surprised to find that my NCT bus pass was accepted.
