Subject:

Satterthwaite Project - Day 11.

Notes:

In May and June 1978 together with Philip Naylor, Claire Croft-White Gerhard Wilke and his partner, Maggie Hughes, Jeff Rosenberg and a girl I think may have been called Mel, I worked on a Garnett College teacher training project to study Satterthwaite in Grizedale Cumbria. My role was that of the photographer. The fortnight in the Lakes still stands out as one of the best two weeks in my life.

The saw mill is, I think, Grizedale Saw Mill which was converted in 1988 into the "Gallery in the Forest" and two craft workshops. I don't think that there is now much logging in Grizedale but it is likely that any timber felled is exported to Ireland for sawing. A surprising number of people from the village relied on the logging and sawing for employment in 1978, it appears that that has now all gone. The emphasis for the Forestry Commission is now almost entirely on visitor experiences, a visitor centre, trails, bike hire, and the ubiquitous "Go Ape". The popular and successful Theatre in the Forest is closed and the arts in the forest programme has gone. Even the charcoal burners hut has been allowed to collapse and now only the overgrown walls remain.

In the absence of local shops, door to door shopping vans were then successful but as housing has been given over to the holiday trade and on-line shopping has expanded I suspect the "butchers van" has become a thing of the past.

Dates:

The dates are reasonable guesses from the sequence of images given that the starting date of 27th May is a matter of record. The times are best guesses based on shadows and events but unlikely to be accurate.
