Newark on Trent. U3A History Group.

Notes:

U3A History Group. Civil War tour.

Janet Seiboth's parents lived just outside Newark and we took the train to Newark regularly to see her Mum and her sisters Carol and Elizabeth. Her dad was there too, he worked on an RAF base but he was a serial child molester and difficult to deal with. This would be 1969 possibly through to 1971. Janet's mum would check his pockets for bags of sweets before he went out.

Newark was not an attractive place to be then and we didn't go into town much as the local youth, who it seemed mainly worked in the ball bearing factory, would look for trouble with the squaddies when they weren't confined to barracks. It's a great shame as now I have seen those magnificent coaching inns around the Market Place, all converted into mini shopping Malls, like The Flying Horse in Nottingham and I expect many would still be open as pubs if not functioning as inns between 1969 and 1971.

Now Newark is a charming historical town with many ancient buildings still intact. With two railway stations still, a coach station, a navigable stretch of the River Trent and the crossroads of the Fosse Way and the Great North Road the Newark is a popular dormitory town and has an higher average income per head than the rest of the East Midlands.

I did not see a single black face in the town during the five hours I was there and only a very few Asians.

If I'm to visit again as I hope to do it will not be possible to delay for another 50 years.
