The Nottingham Boat Club, Arundel Avenue and Bridgford Park.

Notes:

The Boat Club on Trent Side was not only the best blues/progressive venue in Nottingham in the late sixties and very early seventies but was recognised by Melody Maker as one of the best in country. Small, cosy and intense I read in MM that the Boat Club was even better than Klooks Kleek in West Hampstead. I'd never been to Klooks Kleek but I read of bands appearing there all the time. I saw Juniors Eyes and Led Zeppelin in the Boat in 1969.

It was with some sadness that I read that Forest now has ownership of the three river side clubs, The Brit, The Boat and the Union and that they intend to knock them down. Why the hell there isn't a preservation order on them I can't imagine.

When I saw that a new(ish) band, "The Lapsed" were playing there at a charity event I was keen to go for at least one more time.

The band was disappointingly old, as all live bands seem now to be but remarkably good, albeit that most of their stuff consists of covers from better times.

Rahel I think enjoyed the event and we did dance a little which is tricky for me nowadays given the footwear that my various age related injuries obliges me to wear.

On 28th November there was astonishing snow storm on the way to Castle Donington to pick up Rahel from her work at the Marks and Spencer distribution centre. I was driving blind and within minutes the road sides were completely hidden in several inches of snow. Such was the freakishness of the weather incident the snow was already leaving by the time Rahel came out of work and it was more or less gone by the time we got back to Bridgford.
