Yellow Winged Darter

Notes:

This chap came to sit on my chair yesterday and suggested we do a photo shoot. Thinking we'd be pressed for time I tried using the mobile phone that was readily to hand but found that it was impossible to focus on him.

He was happy to wait while I went to fetch the camera from upstairs but after a few shots we agreed it still wasn't really doing him justice so although hitherto I'd not met with any success in it's use, I fetched the macro lens.

The problem with the macro is that you just can't get any depth of field except at the smallest stops and to use those you need to mount a ring flash. I was worried that flash would frighten him off but he said that sunlight flashing off water was his forte so off I went again to get the gibbons.

As I thrashed about trying to find the right sized mount he told me I could relax as he didn't need to be at his next appointment for half an hour so eventually we got the whole thing together, albeit without the tripod.

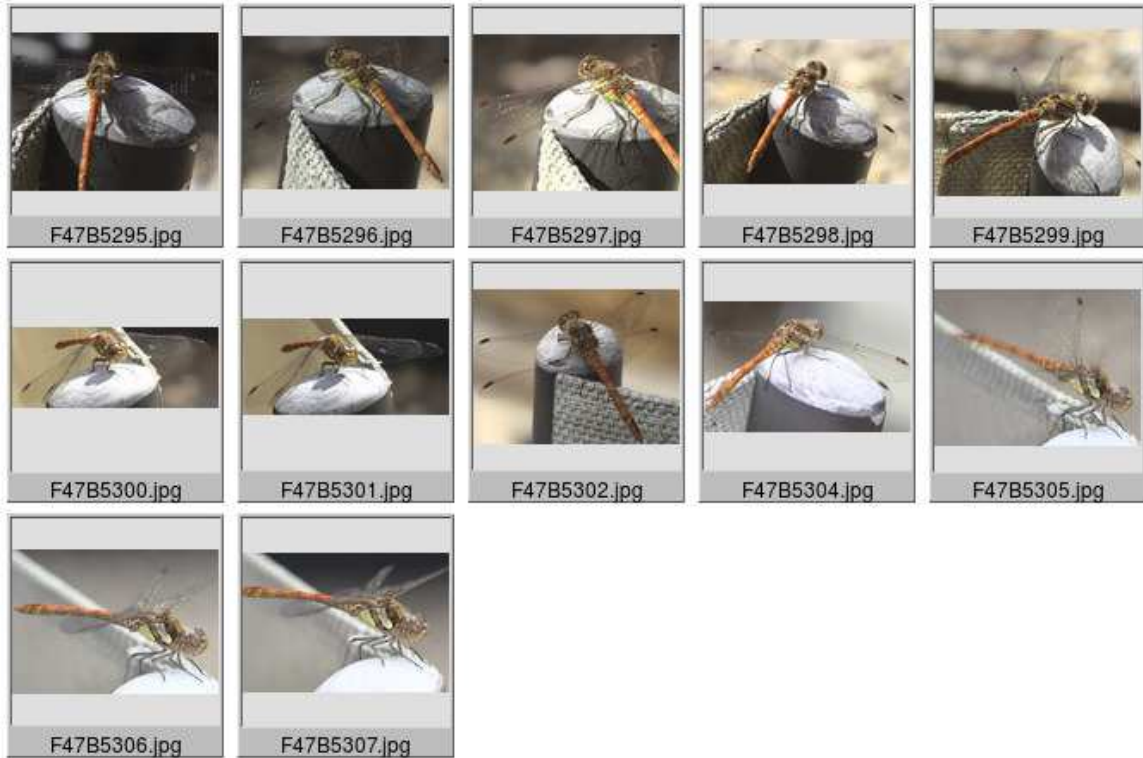

The shots I thought weren't too bad but I didn't think to ask him to leave his details. Google images couldn't help and neither could the British Dragonfly Society. Wikipedia suggested he was a Yellow Winged Darter but I'm not sure. If you know him could you ask and let me know.
